“I knew I was in good hands.”

*Jayne Grant, patient,
Wilson Radiation Oncology*

Jayne Grant has no family history of breast cancer. Yet in 2002, a surgeon removed a cyst from her left breast.

At 47, she performs monthly self exams and receives annual mammograms. Last year, a routine mammogram found cancer in her right breast.

“The cancer looked like grains of sand. It hadn’t spread to my breast tissue, but I needed treatment. I struggled with the decision, but finally decided to get surgery and radiation therapy.

Dr. Keith Lerro and Dr. Margaret Metts and their staff are like family. Everything they told me to do, I did. I knew I was in good hands. And I’m doing well today.”

Wilson Radiation Oncology and Southeastern Medical Oncology embrace a respectful and caring environment that encourages patients to become partners in their own care. We offer national clinical cancer trials and provide state-of-the-art cancer care. Most of all, we provide compassionate care.

Just ask Jayne.
